Dr. John Henrik Clarke

- Born to parents who worked in the Alabama sharecropping and domestic fields, Dr. John Henrik Clarke moved to Harlem as a part of the Great Migration and developed into a widely influential Pan-African American writer, historian, and professor. Clarke noted, "I began to suspect at this early age that someone had distorted the image of my people. My long search for the true history of African people the world over began."
- ➡ Dr. Clarke studied at New York University, Columbia University, Hunter College, the New School of Social Research and Pacific Western University. He was a pioneer in the field of pan-African studies, creating one of the first and most influential Africana departments in the country at Hunter College, NY.
- Dr. Clarke's search for true history took him to libraries, museums, attics, archives and collections in Asia, the Caribbean, Europe, Latin America and Africa. Sankofa World Publishers notes Dr. Clarke's relationship with African people afforded him the company of kings, queens, presidents and other heads of state, notably Kwame Nkrumah, first post-colonial President of Ghana.
- ♣ Dr. Clarke influenced countless figures in Black History such as Betty Shabazz and Malcolm X, Zora Neale Hurston, James Baldwin, Martin Luther King Jr., Richard Wright, Julian Mayfield, and Audre Lorde, among others.
